Filipino Communists Kill 27 In 2 Attacks on Armed Forces

By Keith B. Richburg

Washington Post Service MANILA - Communist guerniles, taking advantage of disarray in the Philippine military after the coup attempt last week, have killed 21 soldiers and wounded five others in an ambush east of Manila. It was the largest single loss for the armed forces this year in their battle against the insurgency. Reports reaching Manila on Thursday said more than 200 guerfillas of the New People's Army ambushed a 28-man army convoy miles (80 kilometers) east of the

Chile Opposition Unites In Anti-Pinochet Effort

By Juan de Onis International Herald Tribune
SANTIAGO — Opposition par-

cade of repression and disunity, have agreed on a political campaign opposing General Augusto Pinochet's bid for a new eight-year term as president.

The agreement excludes the Communists but covers a broad political spectrum from the rightist National Party through the centrist Christian Democrats to the moderate-left Socialist Party.

The strategy, adopted in a series of meetings in the last week, calls for a nonviolent mobilization of voters in favor of "free elections."

In practice, this means organizing voters to cast "no" votes in a plebiscite to be held next year in which General Pinochet is asking for a "yes" vote to continue in power until 1997. "We have agreed after a series of meetings," said Ricardo Lagos of the Socialist Party, "to coordinate our message and our resources in a national campaign that will mobilize voters against Pinochet."

The Chilean opposition, scattered among six major parties and various splinter groups, has suffered from divisions, personality conflicts and lack of money in more than a decade under the mililary government. This year, the ernment offered to legalize non-Marxist parties and re-register vot-

Although lacking money, the op-position is encouraged in the belief that General Pinochet can be beaten in a fair election. In recent public opinion polls, fewer than 20 percent of voters said they would vote for General Pinochel. Undecided voters ranged from 10 percent to 30 percent in various polls.

In addition, resistance has been growing in the armed forces and conservative political factions to General Pinochet's campaign to stay in power beyond 1989.

Earlier this summer, the commanders of the navy and air force, Admiral José Toribio Merino and General Fernando Matthei, who form part of the four-member military junta, distanced themselves publicly from General Pinochet's campaign for a new term. Both said the next president should be a civil-

Mr. Volcker drove automobiles until they fell apart, railed about the high cost of Washington restaurants, only smoked cheap cigars and lived austerely in an apartment eluttered with newspapers, eight butts and hand-tied fishing flies. Mr. Neikirk wrote.

"His clothes are kind of rumpled up. He really doesn't care a lot about his appearance. He's just sort of cheap." Mr. Volcker's daughter, Janice, is quoted as saying in "Volcker: Portrait of the Money Man."

He bought his daughter, a nurse who lives near Washington in northern Virginia, a washer and dryer "and then proceeded to carry over his laundry every week or so in a suitcase for her to clean." Mr. Neikirk wrote.

"I could see I was getting corralled into that," the daughter told Mr. Neikirk.

Mr. Volcker, appointed by President Jimmy Carter in 1979 and reappointed in 1983 by President Ronald Reagan to a second four-year term as Fed chairman, played down his own role in breaking the inflation that had soared to 13.3 percent when he took office.

Instead, he credited Mr. Reagan's refusal to back down during the air controller's strike in 1981 as having an Fed's restrictive monetary policies, which sent interest rates soaring but also helped reduce inflation to less than 4

Mr. Reagan's decision to fire the controllers rather than accept their salary demands "definitely helped to hold down wages. That had as much to do with braking inflationary expectations as his tight money, the Fed chief said," Mr. Neikirk wrote.

Alan Greenspan, Mr. Volcker's successor at the Fed. however, gave Mr. Volcker credit "to a substantial extent" in the book for reversing the inflation of the 1970s.

New York Times Service WASHINGTON — Air travelrs in the United States will be able to learn if their planned flight is likely to arrive on time, under a new ruling by Transportation Secretary Elizabeth H. Dole. The ruling, announced Wednesday, will require by early next year that the information on flight delays be available at travel agencies or airline ticket offices. It was made amid rising consumer complaints and efforts in Congress to pass laws seeking to improve airline service and safety.

The ruling also requires that comparative statistics he provided on how often airlines lose, delay or damage baggage.

While the rule requires that travel agents and airline ticket clerks have the delayed flight information available they are not required to provide it to customers except upon request.

Representative Guy V. Molinari, Republican of New York, said Mrs. Dole's action was too late. "Congress is in a rather ugly mood," he added, predicting swift passage of a package of airline bills in the House of Representatives. They would establish fines for airlines that have poor performance records and would require that the airlines and the government establish toll-free telephone numbers for the public to register complaints. The ruling applies to the nation's 14 largest airlines, which account for 63 percent of all flights and 90 percent of all domestic airline revenue, Mrs. Dole said its impact would be felt virtually by all passengers because airlines not covered by the ruling generally have connecting flights with those that

To Avoid Controversy

By John F. Burns

New York Times Service
OUEBEC -- Delegates to a conference of 41 French-speaking nations and territories have begun by deleting divisive political issues from their agenda as human-rights 'advocates demonstrated outside. La Francophonie, the French-speaking world's counterpart to the Commonwealth, was meeting for only the second time at the level of government leaders, after an initial conference in Paris 18 months ago.

The hope is to turn the organization into a powerful forum for fostering economic and technical aid and for promoting the French language and culture.

[Foreign Minister Joe Clark said in a statement that debts owed by Senegal, Zaire, Madagascar, Cameroon, the Congo, Ivory Coast and Gabon would be written off because Canada is "seeking to make concrete gestures out of promises discussed by the summit participants."]

Arrangements at the conference underlined the still tenuous nature of the organization.

Major political issues that divide the members — for example, the occupation of Cambodia by Vietnam, which is represented at the meeting by a vice president, Nguyen Huu Tho - have been kept off the agenda.

So too has any discussion of human-rights abuses, which are said to be widespread in many member countries, particularly in WASHINGTON - A career as a diplomat with the U.S. Foreign Service can no longer be viewed as a lifetime vocation.

Hundreds of U.S. diplomats who could expect in past years to serve until age 60 or longer are being forced to retire in their late 40s and early 50s as a result of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, an effort to streamline the service and reduce the budget.

Officers now have roughly 20 years to advance through the ranks and win promotion into the senior Foreign Service. If not, they face mandatory retirement and probably a second ca-

"We don't find jobs and place people," Mr. Woodward said. They have to place themselves. But we act as a facilitator, a support group."

A computerized job bank and "a lot of networking" are made available to the job seekers, Mr. Woodward said. The office provides partitioned work spaces equipped with telephones, typewriters and personal computers.

As a job seeker, a diplomat can face special problems, said Edward L. Peck, a former ambassador to Mauritania, who heads the counseling and training operation. Fluency in Swahili labor market, nor is knowledge of obscure cultures.

"Many of our people who worked in fiscal matters or communications or security have skills that in theory are directly transferrable," be said. "But those people who have worked in functions unique to poblical and economic reporting must face a career change because there realy isn't anybody on the outside who does what the State Department does."

He added: "Psychologically, it is bard to realize that your fluency in Twi or Tagalog is totally worthless after years of effort in producing those polished skills. It's a shock to the system. For some it is a pretty serious problem because they don't have easily marketable skills."

Acceptance into the highly competitive Foreign Service has traditionally marked one as a winner. Of the 18,000 people who took the entry examin 1985, only 250 entered the service. For many of these high achievers, involuntary retirement is seen as failure, and they are reluctant even to talk about it. One officer scheduled for retirement is one of the department's most knowledgeable experts on international trade. Another is an expert on Third World debt issues. The American Foreign Service Association says many officers faced with forced retirement are skilled linguists in Russian, East European ianguages and Arabic.

The process has been compounded by the number of politcal appointments by the Reagan administration, which has left 23 fewer top jobs open to career

The State Department recently reranked a number of jobs, Mr. Peck said, "with 17 percent of the senior jobs being downgraded, which makes for a further bind at top." As a result, the oumber of senior jobs was reduced to 647 from 780.

Hurt Washington Mayor What is more, several grand juries are reported to be looking for still other corruption, focusing on fraud, bribery, racketeering and obstruction of justice.

By B. Drummond Ayres Jr. New York Tinks Service

WASHINGTON - Marion S. Barry Jr., mayor of the nation's capital, is under attack as never before, and some fellow Democrats have started speculating that he might be forced from office.

Persistent findings of government corruption as well as the mayor's sharp-tongued and unmistakably impolitic comments about systematic corruption in his adminmunicipal affairs finally seem to be wounding him.

Mr. Barry, 51, son of a Mississippi sharecropper, has spent almost three decades as a civil rights activist, community organizer and politician, and he does not mince words on the subject of leaving office.

Mr. Barry has not been indicted or convicted, or even publicly accused, of anything. He says that the investigation is overzealous and "Mickey Mouse." that he has broken no laws, that he knows of no istration and that he does not expeel to be indicted when the grand juries conclude their work.

Federal investigators refuse to comment on the inquiry.

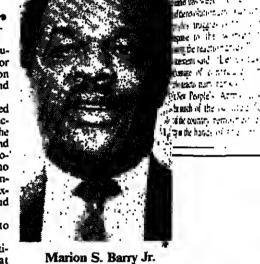

What is clear is that the investigation is widespread and that at one point several years ago investigators were looking into among other things, whether Mr. Barry had bought drugs from a woman he acknowledged having a personal relationship with. The mayor, who is married, took note of the reports and denied making any purchase. For much of his tenure in City Hall, the mayor's standing with his constituency has been little affected by the convictions of aides and the rumors that he and others might soon be indicted. He won a third four-year term in 1986 with 61 percent of the vote.

His impressive showing was helped to a degree by the fact that he was a black candidate in a city that is 70 percent black. But it could also be attributed, political analysts said, to economic and social programs he had instituted as mayor, to his high-profile travels about the city's neighborhoods and to the solid reputation he had built up as one of the early civil rights leaders in the Deep South and subsequently as a community organizer in Washington. But questions about Mr. Barry's continued effectiveness began to pick up momentum when a huge snowstorm paralyzed the city in January and the mayor, who was in California enjoying a Super Bowl weekend, would not hurry back to get the laggard snow-removal teams moving.

with calls about trivial injuries from poor people "saving their big long cars" to drive to sports events instead of the hospital.

Then came the mayor's response to a welfare mother who asked him on a television program to find her a better place to live. "Why don't you stop having all these babies?" he replied. As comments on these incidents have spread, supplemented by a steady stream of rumors and reports about the corruption inquiry. Mr. Barry's popularity has begin to slip, and his detractors have been A poll for The Washington Post.

made public over the weekend, showed that the mayor's approva rating with city residents had dropped to 44 percent, down from 50 percent just over a year ago. On the beels of the poll came reports that some of the mayor's fellow Democrats were beginning to hold meetings to discuss who should succeed him if be is indicted or forced to resign.

Mr. Barry has said all along that there might be "some bad apples in his administration. But he codtends there is no widespread corruption. "What you have," he said in a recent interview, "is a dozen people in a whole government who have taken advantage of the system. It's overblown. We don't have systemwide corruption. It's individual corruption. The mayor, supported by other black politicians, has also accused the investigators of racism.

Lloyd's Raises War Rates By 50% for Gulf Shipping

LONDON - Lloyd's of London underwriters have agreed to a 50percent increase in the cost of war risk insurance premiums for the nulls of all vessels entering the Gulf.

Chris Rome, ehairman of Lloyd's Underwriters' Association, said Wednesday that vessel hull rates were being increased immediately for ships bound for the Gulf.

Mr. Rome said the increase was made necessary by the growing tension in the Gulf since the weekend, when Iraq and Iran resumed attacks on commercial ships and oil installations after a six-week lull. The increase did not apply to the Gulf of Oman but did apply to the Strain of Hormuz, the entrance to the Gulf, he said.

The new premiums mean, for example, that ships calling at Larak Island in the Strait of Hormuz will see their war risk premiums raised to 0.375 percent of the value of the vessel from 0.25 percent.

A total of 353 ships have been reported attacked or damaged in the Gulf as a result of the Iraq-Iran war since May 1981, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said Thursday.

Eighty-five ships have been attacked or damaged this year alone said Roger Lowes, casualty reporting officer for Lloyd's.

Mr. Lowes said the tally of 353 ships included the attack Wedne day night on the 182,000-ton Japanese tanker Nisshin Maru, which was hit on the starboard side by three rocket shells off Dubai.

In addition to the 353 ships known to have been attacked damaged in Gulf, 93 ships are trapped in Gulf ports, he said.

Staying Away Won't Help

development, the United States escapes some simplistic oratory, silly Soviet propaganda and requests to commit funds it cannot commit. It also throws away a chance to learn and to lead on critical issues, and moves further down the regrettable path of thwarting rather than encouraging international cooperation.

The State Department's explanation for boycotting the conference, now under way in New York, is: "We believe disarmament and development are not issues that should be considered interrelated." That is not farfetched. People gathered to talk over these two topics are unlikely to switch easily from spending for guns to spending for butter.

Yet the conference grows oot of broader thinking. It is the brainchild not of some radical kook but of President François Mitterrand of France. The world's resources are limited and arms eat up a towering proportion, nearly $1 trillion a year. The arms industry is the leading moneymaker in many industrialized countries. Little wonder that human imagination seeks new ways to beat swords into plowshares.

The Soviet Union, with its new public relations skill, came to the conference brimming with ideas on how development might progress if less were squandered on arms. Yet it is the world's foremost arms merchant, having overtaken the United States. It arms than any other major power. Its spend-ing on development aid is dismally small.

Developing countries are coming to see that their future depends on finding their own economic answers. The West has much to gain by encouraging this pragmatism, and by helping governments see their security more in the health, education and opportuni ties open to their people than in the size of their armies. All of America's allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are at the conference valiantly making these points. The United States sits out the opportunity.

This boycott is part of a larger trend, which has found the United States in the Reagan years resisting international cooperation — in the Law of the Sea treaty, World Court jurisdiction in the Nicaragua conflict, and in withholding funds for family planning. Washington sent such a low-level delegate to a recent UN conference on trade and development that he aptly de-scribed himself as a "traveling insult."

The insult is to the American people.

Encouraging worldwide community and cooperation is very much in the American interest. That does not require saintly acceptance of bombast at international conferences. The United States would have had a strong case against some of the glib oratory at this one. Would that it were there to make it.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Picking the Next Congress

under way, leaves in the darkness the other 468 federal elections that will be held next year: the contests for Congress. They should not be ignored. The candidates for president promise a wide range of policies, from Jack Kemp's gold standard to the Reverend Jesse Jackson's moratorium on farm foreclosures. But most of those policies would have to be passed by Congress, Voters knew when they re-elected Ronald Reagan in 1984 that he would try to cut domestic spending and increase defense. But they knew that same day, when they reelected their mostly Democratic congressmen, that Congress would limit domestic cuts and defense increases

Insiders now think the next Congress will be much like the current one. House strategists for both parties are targeting only a few opposition seats, and not many incum-bents seem to be retiring. In 1984 and 1986 the overwhelming majority of House in-cumbents were re-elected. So there is not likely to be much change in the House.

There is more possibility of movement in the Senate, and even an outside chance that the Republicans might regain control, if only because there are fewer contests. Individual strengths and weaknesses, odd-duck local issues and sheer luck can play a role, as they did in enabling first the Republicans in 1980 and then the Democrats in 1986 to win almost all the close races and, against the odds, take control. The Democrais have more seats up this time, 18 to 15, and thus should be more vulnerable, but the political events of the first eight months of this year decisions to run or not to run, local issues tended to favor the Democrats. Developments of the last week, however - William Proxmire's retirement from the Senate. Representative Connie Mack's apparent decision to run in Florida, U.S. Attorney Rudolf Giuliani's pondering of a candidacy in New York - may mean fewer absolutely safe Democratic seats and more serious contests. Over a two-year period the battle for Senate control is a seesaw affair in which you keep guessing which side will end up on top.

The race for control of Congress is much less volatile than the race for president, with a far smaller range of possible outcomes. But we should not focus on the presidential race alone. We properly match the candidates their competence, character, issue positions - against one another. But we need to ask also how they would work with the kind of Congress they are likely to get: one that is pretty similar to the one we have now.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Consider the Supercosts

loudly and vigorously to be the site of the superconducting supercollider there is one thing that you should know. The Congress has not yet authorized the money to build it. The project's supporters, which include the Reagan administration, think it will be helpful to have the legislation moving along while a large number of congressmen are anxiously trying to grab the project for their states. But there is more at stake here than its location. The key issue is financing. The supercollider would be the largest scientific research instrument ever huilt, and probably the most expensive. It would be a circular tunnel 52 miles (84 kilometers) in circumference (the Beltway around Washington, for comparison, is 64 miles containing beams of protons steered by immensely powerful magnets. Because the magnets are to be made of superconductors, they would have to be refrigerated to very low temperatures. The idea is to achieve collisions among the protons at energy levels far higher than those achieved in any laboratory before. In the debris, physicists will learn much about the basic structure of matter and of the universe. It is a brilliant concept and holds much promise.

It will cost $4.4 billion in today's dollars, plus the inflation of the six years or so required to build it. Running it will cost several hundred million dollars a year.

it intends the federal government to pro-vide this money in addition to its present funding for basic scientific research. But that will not be the Reagan administration's decision. Nearly all of the money will be appropriated after the next presi dent takes office. The final choices will be made, in any case, by the Congress, Congress ought to build the supercollider only - repeat, only - if it is prepared to do it without cutting the present, barely adequate support for other scientific work. High-energy physics is exciting. but not the only exciting field in physics nor necessarily the most productive. Congress's first priority needs to be funds to support work in university laboratories which not only advances knowledge but contributes to the essential process of training the young scientists who are graduate students. The supercollider, representing a tremendous investment in one narrow series of experiments, will make only a modest contribution there. It is a matter of balance. If the supercollider were to begin draining other, less spectacular research projects to meet its own extraordinary costs, the results would leave physics weaker. Before Congress votes money for construction, it needs to give very careful thought to the consequences for American science as a whole. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Strange Trial in Israel

The trial of Mordechai Vanunu, now taking place in Jerusalem, must be one of the strangest held in a civilized jurisdiction. The charges are not entered on the court record but they are assumed to relate to treasonable acts by Mr. Vanunu in giving intricate details to The Sunday Times (in London] about the secret Dimona nuclear plant. From those disclosures the newspaper was able to deduce that Israel is indeed the sixth nuclear power, with between 100 and 200 weapons. If military secrets are part of the evidence, then naturally a court anywhere will sit in camera, but in Mr. Vanung's case even his entering and leaving the building is concealed from observers.

Is the evidence now being heard against Mr. Vanunu that he told other unspecified people a good deal more than he told The Sunday Times? For what he told the newspaper did little more than confirm the previous suspicion, amounting to virtual cerrainty, that Israel had a nuclear deterrent. There is no point in having a deterrent unless the fact is known to those being deterred. Yet nothing that scientists could not infer from the existence of Dimona appeared in his revelations. Warhead design? No mention. Means of delivery? No mention. Dirty or clean bomb? Small enough to hit targets close by and not expose Israel to fallout, or large enough to flatten a distant foreign city? No mention.

Belatedly, Reagan Moves Toward the Mainstream

WASHINGTON — Finally President Reagan has pointed the way to every president's goal of n bipartisan foreign policy. It is not that his own policy has achieved that sublime status, but be will leave the country a policy that is considerably less off-center and divisive than the one he ran against in 1980 and the one he himself then installed.

This result has come gradually, but its progress has been greatly accelerated by three events:

The first was Mr. Reagan's decision to take the speaker of the House, Jim Wright, a Democrat, as a partner in Central America. The choice did not give the president a fully wrought bipartisan stand, let alone one assured of success, but it did put him in tentatively bipartisan company on the single most contentious issue of the postwar period: whether to intervene in a foreign country to block a communist opportunity or to advance an American one. He decided to give some extra space to a new diplomatic approach.

Late last month, Mr. Reagan moved on to consolidate bipartisanship in arms control, the arena of high policy in which the strategic relationship with the Soviet Union is most vividly acted out. He adjusted the American position on verification in a proposed freaty limiting inter-mediate-range nuclear weapons. His earlier posi-tion had been based on the ideologically congenial premise of total distrust of the Soviets. The new one is designed to ensure the kind of verification consistent with achieving an agreement that is otherwise in the American interest, By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

Not all the movement toward bipartisanship has been by the president. This summer the Democrats in Congress, more or less despite themselves, have gone that way on what is, after strategic arms control and intervention in the Third World, the third great issue of American policy: the use of force in hot spots.

President Jimmy Carter had begun by formally raising the official valuation of the American stake in the Gulf tegion to the level of "vital." The term means that the region is worth defending. The current Congress confirmed the movement by endorsing, in its fashion (with many misgivings), the president's naval policy in the Gulf. Even those Democrats who favor invoking the Vieinam-era War Powers Act, the law designed to check presidential initiative, make clear that most of them seek not so much to confront the president as to support him.

Suddenly, then, the United States has the makings of a bipartisan foreign policy. The president and Congress got to it inadvertently and by different routes. It has mattered to the White House, for instance, that the Iran-contra affair has taken its toll on the president's standing and that Mikhail Gorbachev is coming on strong. It has mattered to the Democrats that they tend to lose presidential elections.

But perhaps the most important thing is that just as Mr. Carter had enough time in office to toward the left, so Ronald Reagan has had even more time to test and display a policy oriented toward the right. The turn toward the middle arises from experience that is extensive, varied and recent enough to make it politically valid. Those who seek additional evidence of the turn need only observe how some of the president's most loyal followers are writhing in agony to see him moving to rejoin the mainstream, whose earlier abandonment by him had been the cause of their rejoicing. Probably it is foolish to under-estimate their bitterness. But, to confess, it is kind of fun to see the long faces.

It is always good news to find a bit of reality breaking through — especially now in the presi-dential campaign. The early phases of the nomi-nating process are often said to be captive to the more extreme folks of both parties. True or not, Democrats are tending to bunch toward the center, and where Jack Kemp and a few others are cultivating the part of the Republican spec-trum that supported Mr. Reagan in his prime, the beavier Republican litters are in a place that many Democrats could live with.

I do not mean to suggest that passion, venom, individual nuance or. least of all, the capacity for grievous error have gone out of the making of foreign policy. There is political company in the center, but whether there is wisdom and sureness is another matter. Company, however, is worth a lot in this business

An Economic Harpoon Can Stop Japanese Whaling

XXYASHINGTON - In mid-Oc- Inber, the largest remaining flect of commercial whaling ships op-erating in the world is scheduled to set out from its home port in Japan, bound for the waters of Amarctica, Its goal is to kill 875 whales, ostensi-

For these reasons, the World Wildlife Fund has asked President Reagan to impose punitive economic sanctions on Japan's fishing industry if it takes whales in Antarctica, U.S. law empowers the president to make life difficult for the fishing industry of any nation that seeks to diminish the effec-Commission. Three years ago, after announcing it would not abide by the commission's 1986-1990 moratorium on commercial whaling, Japan found itself vulnerable to an embargo on fish exports to the United States and a reduction, by as much as half, in the

Since the commission cannot conpel Japan of any other signatory to comply with its rulings, the threat of sanctions is the main source of leverage to conserve global whale stocks, In a compromise negotiated in 1984 by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, who died in July, the United States agreed to withhold these sanctions if Japan agreed to end whaling this year. Several environmental groups sued to incalidate the agreement but the Supreme Court upheld the arrangement.

Japan now seems determined to repudiate Mr. Baldridge's good faith agreement under the guise of "research." Last April, shortly after Japan's whaling fleet returned to port with the remains of several thousand whales. about whales, their status in the wild, is best learned by the study of living whales. With this in mind, the commission, with strong American sup-port, voted by a wide margin in June to reject Japan's "scientific" whaling plan, as well as plans submitted by Iceland and South Korea.

Meanwhile, the commission will conduct a comprehensive assessment of whale stocks using nonlethal techniques, after which it hopes to deliver an informed judgment about the future of commercial whaling.

are decrepit. Japan could easily absorb the cost of assisting workers displaced hy a halt in commercial operations. Japanese politicians and officials claim they do not fear sanctions, in part because Japan's fish catch in U.S. waters is dramatically lower now than it was at the time of the Baldrige negotiations. Still, that catch is worth tens of millions of dollars, Moreover, Japan's exports of fish products to America, valued at $565 million in 1986, are also vulnerable to sanctions. Japan's economy therefore has much more to lose from sanctions than from idling its whaling fleet.

Economic sanctions are a drastic measure. The threat of them is certain to provoke more cries of "Japan-bashing." But the fabric of laws goveming international conservation is The other major force in whaling, fragile at best. In the interest of reinforcing it. A Day in the Life of Japan's Stahvart, the 'Salaryman'

TOKYO — He is hailed here as an "industrial warrior," the driving force behind Japan's economic success. He is also ridiculed in cartoons and commercials as a wimp who lives in terror of the boss's glower and who chews antacids by the case.

He is as much a part of the Japanese cityscape as neon and sushi bars. He is found in dark suit and imported necktie, his short hair parted on the left. No beards or moustaches. Accessories are standard, too - pocket calculator, leather briefcase, commuting pass, business cards, pornographic comic book for subway rides.

He is mass-produced. The "salary-man," as the male white-collar worker is called in Japan, is what most of the 280,000 young men who graduate from universities each year become. The good salaryman devotes himself body and soul to the company. If the company thrives, so will he. He loves his family, but in a pinch he can be counted on to put the office first. In few countries do such stereotypes hit so close to the truth. The Japanese joke endlessly about the salaryman, but not much is happening to replace him as an important bearer of the national standard. Some analysts predict that the new generation of young people, more devoted, it is said, to family and self-expression, will undermine the salaryman lifestyle. But for now, a good job at a good company is what the average young man aspires to and the salary.

WASHINGTON — The debate over a pending U.S.-Soviet treaty on intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe is rolling merrily along on a danger-ously faulty premise: that wars usually are intentional. In fact, some of Europe's most destructive wars have shipped up on the blind side, arising from miscalculation. On the ABC television program, "This Week With David Brinkley," General Beruard Rogers, the former NATO commander, was asked recently to imagine a sunrise invasion of Western Europe by massive Warsaw Pact forces. Pick a date, general," he was told. "Dec. 7, if you will." The general seemed a bit nonphissed, as well be might, for the Pearl Harbor analogy is especially inappropriate. Few students of the European military scene would predict such an attack. it could happen, but other routes to dangerous crisis are far more easily imagined.

For one thing, Russia has historically been a cantious, isolationist power, more invaded than invading. Its tendency to make hearty meals of peripheral states (as now in Afghanistan) springs in part from the insecurity of not having naturally defensible borders. But the insecure are no less prone to miscalculation than the secure. Nikita Khrushchev, who gave us the Cuban missile crisis of 1962, said in his memoirs: "We had no desire to start a war ... Our principal aim was only to By Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

Fewer Missiles Will Mean Fewer Options

deter America from starting a war" to overthrow Fidel Castro. The denial is perfectly credible, but the point is that his miscalculation brought the world as close to nuclear war as it has come.

Getting back to the treaty: As General Rogers explained, the "zero-zero" agreement, under which the United States and the Soviet Union would scrap all theaterrange nuclear missiles of 300- in 3,500mile ranges (500 to 5,700 kilometers). would knock several rungs from the ladder of possible responses to aggression.

Suppose that in the hrave new world of e "denuclearized" Europe a regime came to power in Belgrade and proclaimed its intention to heal Tito's "fraternal" breach of 1948. Suppose that this regime, beset (as it would be) by patriotic Yugoslavs, called for Soviet help. How would the prospect look from the Kremlin, in a Europe now denuded of short-range nnelear weapons, where, as a result, the Red Army is the most powerful fighting force? Might the Soviets gamble? No one can say. But who wants to experiment?

Yugoslavia isn't a member of NATO. But its reversion to Soviet vassalage would be precisely the sort of tilt in the European balance of power - dangerous in itself, and more so in the further ambitions it might arouse — that could sorely tempt the Soviets in a rash moment. We must hope not; but the examples of Hungary and Czechoslovakia are there.

In such a crisis, it is predictable that the people who think an agreement on intermediate nuclear forces would be wonderful would be saying, plausibly enough, that Yugoslav independence, however valuable, is hardly worth the risk of glob-al nuclear war. Which, in fact, is why "extended deterrence" based oo U.S. strategic nuclear forces of intercontinental range has steadily lost credibility over the past two decades, and required augmentation on the continent by less catastrophic weapons like the Pershing-2.

It would be hard to argue that U.S. "Euromissiles" keep the Yugoslavs independent. They do a pretty good joh of that on their own. But the Euromissiles do broaden the range of nuclear options in the face of Soviet conventional superiority. And to that degree they discourage the rashness that could become tempting in a "nuclear-free" Europe.

The question, then, is why enter an arms control treaty that lowers the nuelear threshold, weakens deterrence and invites adventurism without compensating adjustments in conventional and intercontinental weaponry? For show? For politics? For wbar?

the economic state of the union. Many people happily went on about how well they were doing and expected to keep on doing, and then said that they thought that the United States. and perhaps the world, was on the verge of an economic collapse.

Things seem good, very good indeed. There is new construction all around and "Help Wanted" signs everywhere. And conspicuous consumption. Out here in Manhattan's summer playground -- New Yorkers "relax" by puting on shorts and talking business with the same people they do business with in suits in the city — the latest excess seems to be old cars. Hard Work. Whatever economic problems the United States has or will have, I refuse to helieve that the "low productivity" or the "laziness" of Americans is a significant factor. We may not he in the same mass-lahor stage of industrial development as are, say, the South Koreans or the Taiwanese, but the American two-week vacation is the wonder of a relaxing developed world. Each morning, my wife and I walk along the Atlantie's beaches here, arguably the most beautiful in the world. We rarely see another soul on the sand. The houses facing the sea are empty five or six days a week. Where is everybody? Back in the city, killing themselves for a few more hucks. In Europe, I guarantee you, you can't see the sand for weeks at a time because of the people stretched out across it.

In May 1939 I arrived in Paris, 24 years old and dreaming of a career as a glamorous foreign correspondent, inspired by the likes of Vincent Sheean and John Gunther.

THROUGH THE MOST POPULAR LOTTERY OF NORTH-WEST GERMANY

Our greatly improved Nordwestdeutsche Klassenlotterie now offers even more attractive chances to win bigger and better prizes than ever before. There are exceptionally great possibilities of winning because the prizes are so well distributed that over 40 % of all ticket numbers win during the course of a lottery. This implies that one out of 21/2 ticket numbers is lucky. thus creating the mathematical probability to win by participating with at least three

OVER 171 MILLION DM ARE GIVEN AWAY AND YOU COULD WIN A PRIZE OF 1 MILLION DM IN EACH DRAW!

NOW each class starts with a SUPER DRAW of a guaranteed 1 million DM, ½ million DM, ¼ million DM and 100,000 DM plus thousands of other prizes ranging up to 80,000 DM. In the following 3 draws of classes 1 to 5 there is 1 million DM or 10 x 100,000 DM among other prizes. Besides the guaranteed 1 million DM in the first 3 draws of the 6th class there is also A TWO MILLION DM PRIZE IN EACH OF THE THREE FINAL DRAWS! And - we are still maintaining our favourable tickel prices.

Making millionaires is our business

... and ours is the only lottery that has the right to make this statement. The odda are really excellent - just take a look at the number of tickets issued (only 500,000 in all) and the unbelievable total of 200,054 prizes, which are given away. But considering the possibility of winning a super prize of 100,000 DM, 1 million DM or 2 million DM, you will find chances prove to be extremaly good compared with other gambling games - especially as our ticket prices are unchanged. A complate lottery (serles), covering a period of six months, is divided into 6 classes. Every class has 4 draws (one each Friday) except the 6th (main) class which has 6 drawing days running over 5 weeks. The total of winning numbers and the value of prizes increase from class to class up to the end of the series when the 3 TOP PRIZES OF 2 MILLION DM EACH are ratified.

A state-controlled lottery means security

All the draws and prizes in the game are controlled by a board of directors in Hamburg, who act for end on behalf of the six German Federal States aponsoring the Nordwestdeutsche Klassenlotterie. Total agreement must ha reached concerning the drawing dates and tha determination of prizes shown on the winning plan, which has to be drawn up and published before the series starts. The winning plan together with the Rules and Regulations datermine the game. All draws are held in public and there is the guarantee that each winner will receive his priza.

We give a reliable service

YOU WILL BE INFORMED AS SOON AS YOUR NUMBER HAS BEEN DRAWN! We'll not only send you the official winning lists along with the renewal tickets every 4 weeks, but we'll also notify you personally and in strictest confidence immediately after you have won. Nobody will know about your participation in the lottery or possible winnings because all our clients' records are kept aclely in our office and we are hound to secrecy under professional discretion. All prizes are immediately paid out in full, free from German tax and according to your advice. All payments are made in arty currency and to any address or person of your choice. Reports of Rights Violations Persist in Museveni's Uganda

New York Times Service

KAMPALA, Uganda - When Yoweri Museveni was sworn in as president of Uganda 18 months ago, he promised to bring law and order back to a nation that had endured years of nightmarish violence, repression and bloodshed.

But since be seized power, Mr. Museveni himself has been accused of major human rights violations against those perceived as opponents by his government. International relief officials, human rights organizations and prominent Ugandans have asserted that Mr. Museveni's government although it may not be as brutal as those of past rulers, has committed abuses that bring into question whether the country's pattern of chaos can soon end. Mr. Museveni generally denies such charges. Nevertheless, the political opposition, independent human rights groups and international relief organizations accuse the Ugandan authorities of forturing prisoners and of indefinitely detaining without charge thousands of political opponents and rebel suspects in overcrowded and squalid military barracks and maximumsecurity prisons.

Ugandans who monitor the situation said more than 60 people died in such prisons from January to July of this year, largely because of disease, lack of food, water and clothing, inadequate medical care and grossly unsanitary conditions.

Finding the Roots of Modern Greece

THENS - Emblems of an Athens summer: On a warm, Sunday evening, in an amphitheater 1,900 years old on the lea of the Acropolis, Vladimir Ashkenazy plays Schubert and Schumann. The brilliance billows through old stonework dusted by dusk sliding toward indigo night, and haunted by other, impenetrable gloamings from the

The debate is one that has seized outsiders for centuries: What is "Greek-ness," or, what, if any, is the strand that ties the crass sprawl and the ill temper, the noise of modern Athens to older times perceived as a balcyon age of creation, thought and inspiration in the rose-glow of reinvention? The answer, many foreigners, and Greeks, too, say bluntly, is: None.

nation aware of a past too grand to be lived up to, born of a history that offers no easy answers, and chronicled by poets like Ni-kos Kazantzakis who wrote of "the doubleborn soul of Greece,

It is a discussion that is fraught with prides too easy to offend and sensitivities that collide in the talking. In the early 19th century, in Lord Byron's time, for instance, some European travelers termed the Greeks barbarians for failing to shelter and stroke the relics of their own antiquity -a rude epithet no Greek of any period would

There is, said Niko Stavroulakis, the Cretan curator of Athens's Jewish Museum and an expert on the history of Byzantium, "ancient Greece and modern Greece and the myth that has been circulating since the 19th century that they have some kind of

been done violence to by European romanticism, and made to feel self-conscious about it," he said. That, possibly, might be part of Kazantzakis's double-soul.

Ancient Greece was a string of citystates, pagan in its beliefs, prodigious in its architecture and intellectual legacy - one that has inspired European thinkers and poets for centuries. Modern Greece, since its creation in 1830, has evolved as a Westem nation-state, built on the rump of an oriental empire, after centuries of Byzantine and Ottoman rule,

That history, said John Zervos, the director of the Athens Center, where foreigners learn the Greek language, left a divided legacy that endures in modern Greece. There was, he said, "the classical Greek, heroic, straightforward, artistic, innovative. And there was the Byzantine Greek, conniving, underhanded, canny."

Greece, he and others have ooted, knew no Renaissance in the manner of Western Europe, because, for almost four centuries until 1830, what is now Greece was a millet of the Ottoman Empire,

So what, then, endures, from classical to modern times?

"The architectural lines of ancient Greece are not to be found in the few (fortunately) imitative miniatures in Greece today, nor in the bastard Mediter-ranean buildings that make of Athens today a monotonous commonplace," said Kimon Friar, who has translated much Greek poetry into English, in the introduction to his anthology, "Modern Greek Verse," published in 1982.

But, unlike some others, Friar traces some links, "Greek traditions," he wrote, "flow like underground currents through Homeric, classical, Byzantine, medieval and modern times, sometimes murmuring and subdued, sometimes jetting to the surface, finding an outlet in folk ballads during the 400 years of the Ottoman occupation, and branching into many fertilizing and irrigating streams after the Greek War of Independence.

And, like many others, Friar depicts the Orthodox Church as a kind of custodian of language and culture, a descendant perhaps of earlier times when Greek became Christianity's first language.

The tradition traced by Friar - and disputed by others - is perhaps most evident in the modern Greek poetry he has translated, a statement, almost, of a linguis-tic continuity of some kind that has survived the ahrupt breaks in tradition that came, for instance, with the official banishment of pagan beliefs in A.D. 395.

Inversely, too, there is a kind of bond that links modern, Western thought with the world of ancient Greece through the impact of Greek texts and models on some of those figures who have molded Western cultural and philosophical traditions, "Luther could read Homer in the original," said Emilios Bouratinos, the Greek cultural assistant at the U.S. Embassy. "Michelangelo was inspired by Greek sculpture. Galileo was saying the same things as an ancient Greek astronomer. Greece was an inspiration for others - Shakespeare and Racine,

Yet, he said, "Today the best one can see. in plays and books is a reflection of Western philosophy, Western theater, Western music. So what is particularly Greek? The

That, he said, produced a schizophrenia. The Greek today is very keen on appearing Western. He considers the West to be the high point of civilization." So, he con-Western or popular Greek. Between the bouzouki and Mozart, there is no bridge." At the Athens Festival, held from mid-June to mid-September, the most vaunted theatrical productions are those, staged in the ancient theater of Epidaurus, of the ancient Greek classics.

"The Greeks," said Zervos, "are only. now beginning to have a relationship with their past." True, he said, some well-known Greek performers, such as Maria Callas, have made their names abroad, but the thrust of the modern nation was to seek inspiration from foreign sources. We like foreign things," Zervos said,

"whether it's blue jeans or automobiles. We preserve our monuments because the forcigners are still interested."

Against all this, Joe Cocker's show, and those of other rock bands seemed a part of that hankering for the new and the foreign. Yet Cocker seemed to feel obliged to make his own obeisance to Greece's past.

Sitting in his $2,000-a-day hotel suite looking onto the Acropolis, he said, he thought sometimes of Pythagoras and that made him, he said, "very emotional." And then he laughed and the band played on. © 1987 The New York Times

The Real Pasolini: More Gadfly Than Creator

by Thomas Quinn Curtiss

IER PAOLO PASOLINI, who was a symbol of postwar changes in politics and in sexual mores before his violent death in 1975, has become a period figure whose films are now taught in universities rather than banned. A sympathetic portrait of Pasolini by Enzo Siciliano, a Milanese journalist and author - now published in English by the Bloomsbury Press of London - provides a running commentary of the zigzag history of postwar Italy against which the directorpoet rose to fame.

Born in Bologna in 1922, the son of an army officer and a doting mother, Pasolini was a precocious child, in his schooldays already writing lyric blank verse and contemplating political reforms for the betterment of his countrymen. He was not the common bookworm weakling, keeping in physical trim by participating in soccer games, swimming competitions and bicycling excursions.

He thought of himself as a philosopher and naïvely tried to resolve Christian and Marxist ideology. Toward the end of World War II, Pasolini joined the Communist Party. His proud spirit revolted at submit-ting to orders and his inborn Catholicism held him in its grip, though it failed to still his pagan yearnings. He was expelled from the party for his overt homosexuality.

He had a deep compassion for the under-dog and roamed Rome's shanty towns to record what he saw in two novels relating the lot of the excluded. He drew the grim background with some stylist flashes, but he was an outsider looking in.

Federico Fellini engaged him as an assistant and scenarist and soon Pasolini was dy and his version of "The Oresteia" for making his first film, "Accattone," set in a Vittorio Gassman; of acting and direction; and acted by inhabitants of that wasteland.

He followed it with a similar study of the Pasolini went on to outline dispossessed, "Mamma Roma," with Anna Magnani. Both films met with censorship that brought him to national attention. This pleased him for he enjoyed vexing the Pasolini went on to outline a film he was preparing. It was loosely based on Tolstoy's "The Death of Ivan Ilyich," the story of a man in middle age, suddenly stricken with illness and beset by his conscience to review his life as death approaches. He had taken "I love life fiercely, desperately," he an-nounced. "And I believe this will carry me related a few of its sequences so vividly that

Nor could the movie-parlor magic epic, "Intolerance," to contrast it with the properly depict the elevation of the bornanew domestic who suggested Mary Poppins on one of her flights and evoked langh-

Again Pasolini had created a scandal, in the majority. They denounced the film as this time with the clergy in dispute as to a travesty of a classic and criticized his whether "Teorema" was sacred or profane. whether "Teorema" was sacred or profane. "Pasolinian." Siciliano records, was now an adjective used by the press to indicate everything in Rome concerning the sub-proletariat, low life and homosexuality. He was charged in one instance with an attempted armed robbery of a filling sta-material for a film script. The attendant swore that Pasolini had held a gun to his throat. The case was dismissed for lack of evidence, but it augmented his notoriety.

As permissiveness spread in the late 1960s, censorship retreated and Pasolini had a freer hand. He made the most of it. Probably his producers were responsible for his efforts to bring Boccaccio, Chaucer, 'The Arabian Nights" and the Marquis de Sade to the screen.

His "Decameron" had spirit and flavor, there was pictorial beauty to his "Arabian Nights," though in exotic magic it was inferior to the exotic fantasy of Douglas Fairbanks's "The Thief of Baghdad," but "The Canterbury Tales" descended to burlesque humor and even inserted a Charlie Chaplin figure into its medieval midst. In his final film, "Saló, or the 120 Days of Sodom," he appeared intent on dramatizing sado-masochistic obsessions.

On Nov. 2, 1975, his battered body was found on a deserted field outside Rome. He had been murdered by a homosexual prostitute but, from the evidence that Siciliano presents, the possibility exists that the youth had not acted alone, that the crime was politically motivated. Mystery continues to hover over the case.

In retrospect Pasolini seems to have been more gadfly than creator. He accomplished some scenes of beautiful texture on the screen, but he did not either alter or forward the medium. He struggled again and again to produce in filmic images the concepts of his violent imagination, a feat he only rarely achieved. Be that as it may, he has already become a legend.

by Paul Richard

ASHINGTON — The Smithsonian Institution's newest building no the Mall has been com-pleted, but one can't belp wondering what it is they have built.

Its scale is deceptive, its architectural allusions intriguing hut misleading. No wonder the new Quadrangle, which will open to the public on Sept. 28, baffles passers by.

You see a trim Victorian garden with stately gates and gravel walks, clipped trees and parterres. That elegant, four-acre park calls to mind a day of parasols, straw boaters and croquet. But it's actually brand-new and cost $3 million. The Enid A. Haupt Garden (she gave the Smithsonian the money) feels comfortably earth solid when you step tipon its lawns. But there is hallowness beneath you. It's been grown upon a roof.

You see a pair of granite-faced pavilions. Both send out mixed messages. One is roofed with pyramids that hint at ancient Egypt, though the new museum underneath it, the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, holds no Egyptian art. The other is roofed with domes like those of the tiled mosques of Iran. It leads to the National Museum of African Art, a museum that, of course, contains no Iranian art.

You see a third huilding called the Kiosk. It is domed, round, almost cute. Built between the Castle and the Freer Gallery of Art it has the slightly silly look of a folly in a park. The Kiosk is the entrance to the third part of the complex, the part least well un-

What you can't see is enormous. What appears to be a trin of nonprepossessing buildings is actually one vast one, a structure of 360,000 square feet (about 33,450 square meters) - most of which has been constructed below ground. The work of Jean-Paul Carlhian, a fanciful designer, it cost $73.2 million. In some ways it resembles a buge, flat-bottomed boat, double hulled and waterproofed and shoved beneath the ground. Its first two decks are occupied by the new museums. The third (whose floor is more than 50 feet below the level of the street) includes an 8,000-square-foot concourse, a sort of indoor avenue, and will house offices and some exhibition space.

The seed for all this was planted - inadvertently - by Charles Lang Freer (1856-1919), a businessman-industrialist-collector from Detroit.

Freer was a disciple of James MeNeill

Whistler, the art-fnr-art's-sake painter, and once be made his fortune, he gave himself wholeheartedly to the subtle contemplation of the high aesthetic life.

The home gallery be built himself was sky lit, screne, bare. Nn cases held his buldings of Japanese and Chinese and Middle Eastern art. Instead, at his summons, his former coachman Stephen would bring out Freer's art treasures one object at a time. The collector was convinced the beauties of his objects were diminished by the crassness of artificial

More than half a century ago, when Freer agreed to build a museum for the United States, a reporter sought an interview explaining that be wished to write a popular sort of article so that commoo folk could understand the new Freer Gallery of Art, which opened to the public in Washington in 1923. Freer refused the interview. He thought dealing with the public inappropri-

Had Freer been more tolerant, the next-door Sackler Gallery might never have been built. The Smithsonian does oot really need two separate museums of Oriental art, or wouldn't if the Freer worked like other institutions. At the insistence of its founder, who shuddered at the thought of taste less exquiborrows art. The Sackler will. It, too, will be a gallery of Oriental art, but its 18,000 square feet of exhibition space will welcome loan shows. It will lend from its collections. Stands will be constructed in front of many Sackler cases so that children can peer in. One inaugural exhibit, "Monsters, Myths and Minerals" will include an explanation of the Chinese zodiac. There will be photos on the wall, and folk art oo exhibit.

The scholar Milo Beach, who will be running the Sackler, said, "I see the Freer as a sort of Courtauld, an institute of advanced study, an extraordinary graduate school for specialists and scholars already committed to their subject. The Sackler comes in as a kind of undergraduate college, a place where students can be introduced to Oriental art."

Freer valued high refinement and absolute decorum. Sackler, who was Brooklyn-born, was an earthier and friendlier and more ehullient man. "Even in his 70s, he was happy to climh ladders, in the coldest days of winter, in the Quadrangle's construction pit," Beach said. "He had always been interested in the roots of buman genius. That's one reason why he loved the oldest Chinese

The Sackier, as it opens, owns perhaps 1,000 pieces of Japanese, Chinese and Near Eastern art. Though all of them are gifts from Arthur M. Sackier (1913-1987), it was not he who chose them for the new museum. They were picked from Sackler's holdings by the scholar Thomas Lawton, the director of the Freer. Sackler, a New York medical researcher and publisher (who made much money from Valium), was also a collector of far-ranging taste.

The Sackler has three fathers — Sackler, the acquirer and dnnor, Lawton, who selected the things in Sackler's gift, and Beach, who is most responsible for how they will be displayed. The National Museum of African Art might be said to have a parentage of a different sort.

The museum has a father, its founder, Warren Robbins. It also has a mnther, or at least a stepmother. She is Sylvia H. Williams, vbo was appointed its director in 1983. Sometimes striving toward a common goal and sometimes working at cross-purposes - they together are responsible for the partly old, hut mostly new, museum on the Mall.

Most museum founders, the Mellons and the Hirshhorns, the Sacklers and the Freers, were men of mighty wealth. Rohbins never has been rich. He'd always earned his living -as a school teacher in New Hampshire, as a cultural attaché in West Germany and Austria - and yet be somehow managed to create his own museum of art, which opened Rnhhins, 64, quit the U.S. diplomatic corps in 1962 with his heart set oo a grand but not very precise dream. The first thing that he did was found something called the "Center for Cross-Cultural Communication," and then set nut to raise some cash.

He said, "One of the 22 projects I submitted to the Ford Foundation was one for a museum. It took five years, but then, in 1967, they finally came through with a $250,000 grant. We also got the first grant — fnr $20,000 — handed out by the National Endowment for the Humanities. We were the nation's first African museum. We tried to Actually it was more than a museum of African art. At first its programs sprawled. It opeced oo Capitol Hill because Rohbins had acquired there the modest little row house that once had been the home of the abolitionist Frederick Douglass.

It collected many sorts of art. For instance, Robbins much admired the paintings of Henry Ossawa Tanner, then little known. Tanner had had very little to do with Africa he'd been raised in Philadelphia and trained by Thomas Eakins — hut he was American and black and highly skilled as vell. So Rohbins snapped up Tanners. His Afro-American collection eventually included 60 pictures by Tanner, as well as about 200 other works by 19th-century hlack American painters.

Robbins eventually got tired. He said, "I was running out of money. I was running myself ragged." So be conceived another former Smithsonian secretary and in 1979, the Museum of African Art became the standard of the control of the c newest branch of the Smithsonian Institu-

Through Cecil Beaton's Lens: Museum Gets Royal Treasure

by Andy Grundberg

ONDON - The latest treasure to come the way of the Victoria and Albert Museum is an archive of photographs by Cecil Beaton, the fashion photographer, writer and bon vivant who died in 1980. Consisting of some 8,000 negatives and transparences and more than 0,000 prints, the collection is as remarkable for its subject matter as for its author. Every one of the thousands of pictures portrays a member of Britain's royal family.

Beaton photographed Britain's royalty regularly from 1939 to 1970, starting with the Queen Mother and ending with Prince Andrew as a small child. His first portraits were done on assignment for Vogue, but they proved so flattering that the royal household some called him for portrait sessions. He became, as the museum's director, Roy Strong, has observed, Britain's unofficial form photographer.

ne photographs are the promised gift of an Hose, Beaton's personal secretary for more than 25 years, who received them as a bequest of the photographer. Hose and Mark Haworth-Booth, the Victoria and Albert's curator of photography, have selected more than 100 representative images for a show that will go on display in the museum's photography galleries, beginning Sept. 16.

sized collection, it is clear that there are many marvelous photographs in its midst. Some are elegant compositions by themselves, but most are compelling for reasons of both history and nostalgia. To see Princess Margaret as a slim, elegant young woman of 18, or her mother as a mature prewar beauty, is enough to start one singing "Rule Britannia." One shouldn't, however, make the mistake of considering these merely as documentary images.

Beaton, s consummate stylist, knew how to make his subjects gleam. He made sure they were dressed in the height of fashion, always gave them something to do with their and photographed them in front of painted backdrops that suggested vast, cathedral-like spaces. Coming from the world of fashion magazines, he naturally portrayed every queen and princess in front of his lens as if she were a fashion plate. The royals liked what they saw, and they liked it when Beaton's pictures of them appeared in massbingers of today's relentless recording of the lives of the royal family — the appetite for which seems as strong in the United States as it does in Great Britain. While bestowing an air of imperial elegance, they make their imposing subjects seem human, like ordinary mortals. This dual message - that princes and princesses are embodiments of human nobility, yet at the same time they appear just like you or I essence of their public celebrity. As Strong remarks in his foreword to the show's catalogue, Beaton arrived "at a crucial moment in the history of the Crown, when the institution had been badly shaken by the abdica-tion crisis." King Edward's marriage to Wal-lis Simpson made for plenty of press copy. hut it did little for the status of the monarchy itself. It seems fair, then, to read Beaton's photographs as instruments in the reconstruction of the royal image — as tools in an innocent but not insignificant public-relations gambit,

Beaton usually posed his royal subjects in formal attire and frilly gowns, as if they were constantly prepared to attend a party. But he also showed them as representatives of the British people. For example, at the beginning of the war he photographed Princess Elizabeth, a teen-ager in a mannish uniform. The occasion was her installation as the commander of a royal guard unit, an honor-ary post, but the message was symbolic: The royal family was mobilizing for the war. Not for the first time, the monarchy functioned as the image of the country as a whole. It would be an understatement to say that much has changed since Beaton posed the Queen Mother sitting, parasol in hand, be-tween two classical marble torsos. More recently, tabloids like London's News of the World were splashing telephoto glimpses of Princess Diana in a bikini across their front pages, purportedly to show that she has gained weight on her vacation.

Paris.

"If you love food, and are

Such surreptitiously obtained photo-raphs are a far cry from the "official" images purveyed by Beaton, but they are perhaps an inevitable outgrowth of his activity. One might say that Beaton succeeded too well; in resuscitating the image of the Windsor monarchy, he made it part of the same mass-media celebrity machinery that has brought the likes of Jackie Onassis, Joan Collins and Madonna.

The current fascination with the private lives of Di, Fergie and their husbands is surely on a scale that neither Beaton nor the royal family could have anticipated. But it shows how powerful photography can be in the process of forming public images. Whether the picture is a fuzzy, heavily re-touched image of a princess in a swimsuit, or one of Beaton's exquisitely polished, regal compositions, it creates an insatiable appetite for more. This hunger, perhaps, is the essential condition of all celebrity.

Beckett by Shivaun O'Casey

by Andrew L. Yarrow

EW YORK — It takes nerve for a shy, 16-year-old girl to tell Samuel Beckett that be "ought to be more joyful," but that is what Shivaun O'Casey said when she met the author whose dramas about life's hopelessness and meaninglessness have become classics of 20thcentury theater.

Now, 32 years later, O'Casey, who has remained friends with the Irish-born writer, is making her directing debut with Beckett's "Happy Days," which opened this week for an eight-week run at the Samuel Beckett Theater on West 42d Street.

The play, which had its premiere at New York's Cherry Lane Theater in 1961, is a compassionate yet pessimistic tale about a cheerful, talkative woman named Winnie who is buried waist-deep and, later, neck-deep in a mound of sand, and her less-thanloquacious male companion, Willie, who rarely emerges from his own nearby hole.

"I didn't realize what a difficult play it is to direct," said O'Casey, the daughter of Sean O'Casey, the hish playwright. "It's very minimal, like an abstract painting. If you put in the wrong brush stroke, it's no-

The tragic-comic line in Beckett is also very fine," added Mary Beth Yarrow, who is co-producing the play with O'Casey and Jim Stark. "The humor and the tragedy are there

There's a great sadness in the play, but it's redeemed by Winnie's humor," said O'Casey, a soft-spoken woman whose resem-blance to her father goes beyond her silver hair and blue eyes to her passionate interest m social causes. "It's a play about what middle-class morality does to people, and about a relationship between a man and woman and what they've done to each other. "Willie is a kind of Caliban," she said, "He's of the earth, lecherous and lewd. Win-nie's quite proper and religious, and everything has to be in the right place.

neighborhood where Beckett was born and the name that O'Casey, Yarrow and Stark chose for their production company. O'Casey grew up in the British seaside town of Torquay, in Devon, and was introduced to Beckett in London, where she was studying acting and scenic design. Her father and Beckett never met, but O'Casey said that they corresponded and that she "relayed messages" between them during the years before her father's death in 1964.

"Beckett once described Sean as 'a master of burlesque,' and Sean liked and admired Beckett very much," she said. "But he once wrote, 'I'm not waiting for Godot.' He felt the world could change, and Sam probably doesn't think it will."

In plays such as "The Plough and the Stars" and "Shadow of a Gunman," O'Casey's father was an outspoken champion of the poor and oppressed, whereas Beckett, the 81-year-old author of "Waiting for Godot" and "Endgame," has generally es-chewed politics and avoided any discussion about the meaning of his works.

O'Casey recalled that Beckett once wrote to her: "I never give interviews, except unvittingly, having nothing to say on any sub-

But despite the differences between their styles and philosophies, O'Casey said that her father and Beckett, "as people, were both very kind and caring."

"Both lived very simply," she added, "and both had extraordinary eyes that penetrated

Since leaving Devon, O'Casey has acted in and even been a hatmaker for many British stage productions. But it was only after moving to New York five years ago and taking a class with Robert Lewis, a founder of the Actors Studio, that she decided to try her hand at directing.

"Tve always hankered after directing, and Robert urged me to direct," O'Casey said. The obvious choices seemed to be either a Beckett play or one by her father, such as "The Silver Tassie," a 1929 "anti-war requiem" that she said she wants to direct. The decision to produce "Happy Days" evolved out of discussions with Aideen O'Kelly, who plays the sand-bound Winnie, and Yarrow, a producer of television documentaries:

They videotaped a reading of the play last month with O'Kelly and John Leighton, who is the enigmatic Willie, and O'Casey and O'Kelly brought the tape to Paris for Beck-

"Because the rhythms are very important to Sam, he asked to read with Aideen," O'Casey said. "He said to keep it down, not to make Winnie too capable a woman, but he thought it was wonderful."

Their only small conflict was over the play's sparse set, in which Beckett intended to include only one barren mound. "I have three mounds onstage," O'Casey explained 'so Sam said, 'What are the other two for?'

"He didn't talk me out of them, though," she said, smiling. "He said, 'It's your produc-

NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange fell Thursday in moderate trading, pressured by a weak dollar and lower bond prices.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed 2.55 points lower at 2.599.49, according to preliminary figures, after falling 8.93 points on Wednesday, Losers led gainers by 3 to 2, and volume fell to 163.54 million shares from 199.94 million on Wednesday.

An hour before the close the Dow average was down 17 points. Prices were also lower in active trading of over-the-counter and American Stock Exchange issues. Stocks opened higher but quickly lost ground when a mild recovery in the dollar and bond markets fizzled. Weakness in bond futures spilled into stock index futures, depressing prices there enough to make it profitable for traders to buy the futures and sell the underlying cash equities.

The market has been on the defensive since last week; after hitting a new high on Aug. 25, the Dow by Wednesday had fallen about 120

Stocks have been depressed by dollar weak-ness and sharply higher interest rates. The dol-lar has weakened despite central bank intervention in the foreign exchange markets to support

While traders remain worried about these factors, there is also a school of thought on Wall Street that the recent slide in stock prices has been a healthy development.

to be wringing some excessive enthusiasmout of the market, bringing stocks back to levels where investors might find them more attractive to buy for the long term.

The question being debated by many analysts is how far down the market must go to achieve

That "correction," as some describe it, is said this effect.

At 3 P.M., NCNB was the most active NYSE-listed issue, losing ground.
Limited was down 2's to 42% after reporting a 14 percent rise in August sales, but only a 2 percent increase in comparable store sales.

Among blue chips, AT&T and IBM were down fractionally. American Express was lower. General Electric and Coca-Cola were ahead.

Cray Research was down 614 to 9714 after dropping 81: Wednesday on news it had disconinued its most advanced supercomputer pro-

Menck was advancing sharply after rising 4% Tuesday on prospects for its new cholesterolowering drug, which the federal Food and Drug Administration approved Tuesday. Ford Motor was lower: its late August car sales fell slightly.

Avon Products was down. It forecast thirdquarter earnings of 37 cents a share, down from 42 cents in the year-ago period.

At 3 P.M., the NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks was down 1.56 points. to 178.56. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was down 2.29 points at 355.42. Texas Air led the Amex actives, losing

Technicians See the Slide As a Temporary Setback

By VARTANIG C. VARTAN

New York Times Service

EW YORK - What are the stock market's technicians saying about the Dow Jones industrial average's ragged retreat from the record 2,722.42 set on Aug. 25? For the most part, their work indicates that stock prices rose too far too fast—the Dow bad hovered at 2,220 in late May—and were poised for a pullback of limited proportions.

Robert R. Prechter Jr. of Gainesville, Georgia, regarded by many as the market's leading technical guru, said in the Aug. 31 issue of his investment advisory letter, The Elliott Wave Theorist, that "the stock market is likely ending a high-level correction in the 2,600-2,640 range, with new highs due in September." However, he added: "A hreak below 2,600 would make possible a drop back to the 2,300s, which is the deepest selioff allowed at this point in the wave development."

"None of our indicators are flashing danger signals."

Mr. Prechter said Wednesday that his latest asses by represented "good news," rather than any dire forecast. "It says that the maximum market risk is 200 to 300 points, while the upside potential is still greater than 1,000 points from here," he explained. "This is merely an interruption of a major bull market, and my long-term target still calls for a top in the Dow between 3,600 and 3,700 next year."

Those who look for more fundamental causes of market behavior say that fluctuations in the dollar and interest rates, the state of the economy and the outlook for corporate profits are producing the recent whipsaw action. Whatever the reasons, the market's favorite barometer fell 51.98 points, or 2 percent, on Tuesday, followed Wednesday by a decline of 8.93 points, to 2.602.04, after trading below 2,600 for most of the session.

Mr. Prechter's technical outlook is based on the Elliott Wave

Theory, which holds that stock prices move up and down in distinct waves to complete any single bull market or bear market. The 38-year-old Yale graduate set out his long-term case for the bull market shortly after it began more than five years ago with the Dow at 776.92.

N THE CURRENT market, Mr. Prechter said that the one indicator that flashed a warning signal to him late last month was "a slowing in the market's upside momentum when the Dow got above 2,700." He was in New York Wednesday to address a conference sponsored by Monness, Crespi, Hardt & Co., a brokerage firm.

Some technical analysts, who study sentiment measures and other internal market dynamics, see oo particular significance in a break in the Dow below 2,600. Edward P. Nicoski of Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, shares this view. "Two months ago, with the Dow near 2,400, we went virtually to a fully invested position in our model portfolio," said the Minneapolis-based analyst. "But when our short-term indicators recently started to turn negative," he added, "we began raising cash. For example, we track 325 micro-groups in the market and the number of new highs reached a peak last week and then started to contract. I think the market is groping for a bottom, and over the next several months it should trace between 2,500 and 2,700."

Robert S. Robbins, a technical analyst for Robinson-Humphrey Co. in Atlanta, turned cautious on Aug. 14 —one day after the Dow briefly crossed above 2,700 during trading hours. "I sensed trouble in the blue-chip feeding frenzy and, listening to market participants, there was clearly some euphoria in the air," he said. "This correction conceivably could carry the Dow to as low as 2,450, which would mean a pullback of 10 percent from its high. But this is still a super bull market."

At Kidder, Peabody & Co., Dennis E. Jairett is one technical realyst whose optimism remains unruffled, "None of our indicators are flashing danger signals," he said.

Cray Cuts Earnings Estimates

Stock Continues Sharp Decline

MINNEAPOLIS — Cray Re-search Inc. on Wednesday lowered its estimate of earnings growth to between 15 percent and 20 percent over the next few years. The company's earnings bad grown at 60 percent annually in the past two years, a spokeswoman

The lower estimate, which ac-companies the cancellation of a major supercomputer research pro-ject, reflects Cray's expectation for

"much more moderate growth" in the future, the spokeswoman said. In New York, Cray stock continued 10 fall in reaction 10 its decision to cancel the supercomputer project and the resignation of a key executive. It was down $6.75 to $97.75 in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Analysts said Cray's ability to develop next-generation supercomputers was now in doubt due to the resignation of Steve Chen, the pro-ject's leader and chief designer of Cray's most successful supercom-

Moreover, they said other prod-uct delays had clouded the company's outlook through 1988.

John Rutledge, an analyst with Dillon, Read & Co. said Mr. Chen's departure was a major blow to Cray's supercomputer develop-ment efforts, considered the best in

"Clearly, Steven Chen was one of the key architects of Cray's re-search as it is today," Mr. Rutledge.

Mr. Chen's project, known as the MP, was not scheduled for completion until the early 1990s, and thus its cancellation will not have an impact on Cray's short-term re-

Analysts said Cray's near-term earnings would be hurt by prob-lems with its Y-MP supercomputer, its next release, which bad been set for volume shipments in 1988. Delays have pushed that date back by about a year, analysts said.

Slide in Oil Prices Saves France 85 Billion Francs Reuses

PARIS — The slide in the price of crude oil saved the French economy 85 billion francs in the Trib.

($14.14 billion) last year, the National Statistics Institute said Thursday. The average fall in oil prices of 53 percent was the sharpest decline within a year ever registered. Companies, rather than private house-holds, picked up most of the benefits, pushing up profit margins by obtaining productivity gains and avoiding passing on all the decline in oil prices.

The oil import savings compared with total French gross domestic product, calculated for the market economy at current prices, of 4.2 irillion francs.

GDP measures the total value of a nation's goods and services but excludes income from Much of the benefit from cheaper oil went to companies, with 58.6 percent of the total savings. Households had 38.6 percent of the savings.

But the institute said the drop in eoergy prices masked the deterioration in the balance of manufacturing exports. This declined to show a surplus of 32.2 billion francs last year from a 83 billion surplus in 1985, the institute said. Demand for French products grew by 3.2 percent in the year, less than the 4.3 percent upturn experienced on average by other OECD countries.

Philips Agrees Sweetened Bid With U.S. Unit

NEW YORK - Philips NV said Thursday that it had agreed with its subsidiary. North American Philips Corp. on a sweetened offer for the 42 percent of the subsidiary that the Dutch electronics giant doesn't yet own. North American Philips said it intends to recommend the new offer to its shareholders. after the parent company offered one warrant to buy one Philips NV share to its earlier $50 a share offer. The exercise price on the warrant is $31 a share, and it can be used any time through Dec. 31, 1992.

Philips' stock closed at 51.70 guilders ($25.38) on the Amsterdam Stock Exchange on Thursday. The board had decided that the parent company's original $609 million tender offer should not be recommended to shareholders.

Unemployment Falls to 8.6% in West Germany

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispute NUREMBERG - West German unemployment fell to 8.6 percent of the work force from 8.7 percent in July, the Federal Labor Office said

Thursday. The Federal Statistics-Office also announced that consumer prices fell 0.1 percent in August from July, but stood at a higher annual rate of 0.8 percent, confirming provisional figures released earlier.

In July, inflation was u changed from June, and was 0.7 percent higher on an annual ba-

The total out of work, unadusted for seasonal factors, fell to 2.16 million in August from 2.18 million the previous month

In August last year, unem-ployment stood at 2.12 million or 8.5 percent of the work force. The labor office said the number of workers on short time fell 40,611 to 175,094, while the number of vacancies fell 2,827 to 177,425.

THE MAKING OF McPAPER: The Inside Story of USA Today. By Peter Prichard. Andrews, McWeel & Parker/Universal Press Syndicate, 4400 Johnson Dr., Fairway, Kan. 66205.

When USA Today began publishing in September, 1982, the wizards of Wall Street and Madisoo Avenue were virtually unanimous in their hoots of derision and predictions of failure. Editors of other oewspapers were equally dismissive. There was just oo way, everyone agreed, that a new newspaper — starting from scratch, distributed nationally, relying almost exclusively on newsstand sales, filled with the same stories in Boston as in Burbank. California - could possibly succeed in the United

But it's always been a grievous error to underestimate either Allen Neuharth or the appetite of the American public for trivia, superficiality and self-deception. USA Today, Neuharth's brainchild, will never be confused with The New York Times; USA Today is called "MePaper" because its format of very sbort stories (news McNuggets) amid a blizzard of color pictures, charts and graphs make it seem like fast-food journalism. The paper will be 5 years old next month, though, and it already has the second-highest circulation and the highest readership - of any daily newspaper in the United States.

Surveys show that many people feel guilty about not reading a daily newspaper, so Neuharth made it easy for them to assuage their guilt; he created USA Today so people could buy it and persuade themselves they were reading a newspaper. Neubarth created a newspaper that is more like a morning television news show than a traditional newspaper — bright, visual, nothing to severely tax the intellect.

Prichard, a USA Today employee, had access to all of Neuharth's files and memos, in addition to the files of most other USA Today executives, and his account of their struggles, squabbles and exhausting workload in the USA Today launch makes for intriguing and sometimes amusing (or, oo occasion, appall-ing) reading. (David Shaw, LAT) ing) reading.

At a private luncheoo some 20 years ago, the two pioneering leaders of American broadcasting. David Sarnoff and William Paley, discounted with a chuckle, "they'd have to carry him out with his boots on." Lewis J. Paper's biography of the CBS empire builder shows Paley meant what he said. Nearing 86, recently reinstated as chairman of the CBS board of directors following a series of management upheavals. Paley remains a formidable ence on the broadcasting scene. him he $5 billion the $5 billion entertainment and information complex be ourtured and built.

without Paley's approval, although CBS assould reminisced freely. The portrait that charm his contraint and personal friends opened files to him and reminisced freely. The portrait that the charm his contraint hi emerges is generally admiring. Paley's personal charm, his sophisticated life style, his conquest of the social and art worlds, his sagacity and courage in challenging, and ultimately besting:
Sarnoff's mighty NBC are deftly drawn.

Yet almost as formidable as Paley's tristint them.

In his pursuit of an often elusive quarry, Paper has succeeded in achieving a rare degree of editorial balance. He has also provided the most penetrating biographical look thus far at a complex man whose CBS boots are still (Kenneth Bilby, WP) firmly on.

THE WORLD AND RICHARD NIXON, B C.L. Sulzberger. Prentice-Hall Press, ! Gulf & Western Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10023.

After more than a decade in the political wilderness. Richard M. Nixon is staging comeback. This one is for his place in the history books. Because of Watergate, there will are always be an asterisk oext to Nixon's name. But as C.L. Sulzberger demonstrates in The world and Richard Nixon, a revisionist study of the former president, Nixon left a record of major accomplishments in foreign policy.

Sulzberger, a former chief foreign correspondent for The New York Times, has known Nixoo for 30 years and bad extensive dealings with the statesmen with whom the former president worked. From his firsthand experience. ident worked. From his firsthand experiences including numerous interviews with Nixon, activities well as from other source materials. It was an American-East German day at the championships. with athletes from those two countries winning all five gold medals. Greg Foster of the United States retained his title in the men's 110meter hurdles; Sabine Busch of East Germany broke the meet record in winning the women's 400 hurdles and another East German, Thomas Schoenlebe, scored the biggest upset of the meet so far by beating Innocent Egbunike of Nigeria and Butch Reynolds of the United States in the men's 400.

With the decathlon having gotten underway, defending champion Daley Thompson of Britain was struggling. Competing for the first time in more than one year, the world record-holder was in fifth place after the fourth event, the high jump, with 3,483 points. Torsten Voss of East Germany led with 3,645 points, with teammate Christian Schenk second at 3,585.

Schoenlebe, who had said that he just hoped to reach the 400 final, blew by Egbunike and Reynolds in the last 100 meters to win in 44.33 seconds and called it "a hig sur-prise for me." Mandlikova Advances; Lundgren Ousts Cash

NEW YORK — Hana Mandlikova outlasted Jo Durie, 6-3, 6-7 (11-13), 6-2, Thursday in a secondround match at the U.S. Open.

Durie, ranked No. 59, pressed the attack against Mandlikova, seeded fourth, at every opportunity, coming in the net 72 times during the 2-hour, 4-minute match.

"She covers the net very well and I wasn't returning as well as I should," said Mandlikova, the 1985 Open champion. "But I needed a close match like that. It will help me in the long run."

Mandlikova failed to convert three match-point opportunities in the second set. She totaled five aces and 25 service winners.

No. 8 seed Gabriela Sabatini had no trouble advancing in the third round, eliminating Sara Gomer, 6-3. 6-1. The Argentine said afterward, "I have good chances, I am ready in be there. I am feeling good."

Other seeds to advance were No. 12 Bettina Bunge, who ousted Patty Fendick, 6-3, 6-2, and No. 14 Catarina Lindqvist, a 6-2, 6-0 winner against Sabrina Goles.

Three months after winning the men's title at Wimbledon, Pat Cash made an early exit from the U.S. Open on Wednesday. Unseeded Peter Lundgren of Sweden ousted Cash, seeded seventh, with a 6-4, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4 first-round victory.

Cash who struggling all night with his concentration and consistency, floated a backhand long to end the match at 12:44 A.M.

"Since Wimbledon I've had four days off." he said. "I'm stale. I'm losing my concentration — that's been the story all summer.

"I felt I played all right but I lost concentration and lost the points that mattered. I'll go home, take a break and freshen up," said Cash, Canadian Open in August. In three weeks, Lundgren has improved his ranking 65 places in No. 47.

"Return well and serve well, that was what I needed in do, and my baseline game was working very well," said Lundgren, who pounded his heavy top-spin forehand past the aggressive Cash.

Five other men seeded among the top 10 played Wednesday, but none were extended beyond three sets. Eight seeded women, including No. I Steffi Graf, played their opening match and all won in

Among the seeded men's winners on Wednesday were No. 2 Stefan Edberg, No. 3 Mats Wilander, No. 6 Jimmy Connors, and No. 9 Andres Gomez. The only other upset was No. 15 Martin Jaite, who fell to Tomas Smid, 7-6 (7-3), 6-4, Chris Evert, No. 5 Pam Shriver, mer in the huge boats, which could No. 10 Manuela Maleeva, No. 11 Lori McNeil, No. 12 Bertina Bunge and No. 13 Sylvia Hanika.

Connors; although bothered by a sore right foot, celebrated his 35th birthday with a solid 6-1. 6-4, 6-4 victory over Joey Rive, a wild-card in his 17th Open.

Connors, seeded sixth, lost his serve only once and needed just an hour and 43 minutes in subdue Rive, ranked 101st in the world.

Connors received an invitation to play in the Open's 35-and-older division, but declined because, "I still like playing these guys here."

This column did not hear those words since (1) being a column, it had no ears. (2) when the words were uttered, a plane descending toward National Airport was passing eight feet overhead.

"All right, I'll say it again," said the host. The next incoming airplane being 45 seconds away over Chevy Chase, he said, "The lights are going on again all over Georgetown; we shall not see them doused again in our time."

This was arrant nonsense, of course, and the host knew it, but as he had often said to me in the past when I chided him for talking foolishness, "I talk foolishness only because it seems to be what columns enjoy hearing. You must also admit that it is a foolishness fraught with meaningfulness." With considerable shamefulness, this column had to concede that the meaningfulness of his foolishness did, in fact, lead this column a weightiness that was not without

"If you will allow me," said the host, "what you are trying to say is that my foolishness is justified by its fraughtness."

These Washington birds can throw jawbreakers and mind stupefiers at you all night.

This column is not so easily led off the sceot. It had come to inves-that this column intended to press its questions fearlessly, the host, a rich and famous conservative, not to mention a certified paranoid, sat in a sound-proof room and gave this column the full story.

Yes, it was true that the president had gooe soft as mush on peace. The evidence? He handed me a Top Secret telegram sent from the White House to the Kremlin. It proposed a summit meeting at which the two of them - the president and the sigister Soviet master, Gorbachev - would make a joint TV appearance singing "Ain't Gonna Practice War No More."

Yes, teader, the peace threat is that acuse. How are you going to feel when the president orders you to turn in your sword so he and Gorbachev can beat it into a plowshare? He can probably get away with that too. And do you know why? Because American sword collectors and aficionados of sword sport had failed to form a National Sword Association to lobby for the citizen's right to bear swords.

This column's Washingtoo host pointed out that it was silly to beat America's swords into plowsbares For one thing, he said. "Swords don't kill people, people kill people." For another, the incessant American agricultural surpluses are demonstrable proof that we already have more plowshares than we know what to do with.

How then explain the president's turning into a bleeding-heart left-wing, anti-war wacko who was williog to let Nicaragua's Ortega get away with refusing to say "tio," much less "uncle"?

The host winked and said "Cherchez la Premiere Dame." "Are you telling me to search the First Lady?"

"I'm telling you the First Lady is the explanation." he said. "She's softened Ron up until he's become ripe and easy picking for the min-ions of the evil empire." "You mean the First Lady

This column, being an old-fashioned New Deal gentleman, dared not speak the words. Its host, a new-fashiooed conservative, was not so delicate. "Exactly," he said, "Nancy is a

A Chronicle of Civil Rights

By Barbara Gamarekian 7 ASHINGTON - To this day, Mary King never leaves the house without her tooth-

It is a peculianty that lingers as a result of the four years she spent working in the South as a member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee during the civil rights movement in the early 1960s. "We always had toothbrushes in our pockers," she recalled. "I still carry one, not because I think I am going to be jailed, but just out of habit."

King went on to become an adviser to President Jimmy Carter on health and women's issues. and was appointed by him as deputy director of Action, the federal agency that oversees the Peace Corps and VISTA. She has written "Freedom Song. A Per-sonal Story of the 1960s Civil Rights Movement," just published by William Mornw In a foreword to the book.

which is dedicated to 12 people who lost their lives working for the civil rights movement, Mayor Andrew Young of Atlanta writes: "So little is known, and even less is understood, about the complexity of forces that changed the American Southland in the 1460s. America needs to know about the Amzie Moores, Elfa Bakers, Casey Haydens, Bob Zellners, Annelle Ponders and many others, as well as the Martin Luther Kings."

"The thing that confounds and confuses me," King said recently at her home in Washington, "is how much has already been forgotten. Americans have forgotten how people put their lives on the

She said that during the Mississippi Summer Project of 1964, 30 people were heaten, 1,000 were arrested, 35 churches were hurned, 30 homes bombed and three of her fellow workers -James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner were murdered. The project was pivotal in the civil nghts moves ment, and out of it grew the Freedom Democratic Party, which sought political representation

While other civil rights groups worked through the courts and the churches, SNCC worked in the rural areas of the South using the tactics of direct action - sitins, picketing and an extensive voter registration campaign. They were the shock troops of the Freedom Riders.

It was the most pure munifes. tation of democracy that I have ever encountered. A group of oung people who were intense. who cared passionately hut who came without ideology and without foreordained conclusions. She attributes SNCC's image as a radical group to the fact that it "was posing hard, difficult questions. It grappled with the question of non-violence: it ruised questions of reform vs. revolution, of the relationship be-tween men and women, of the nature of leadership."

She added that it was "fiercely egulitarian." open to women even though black men generally spoke for the organization. The rixits of the women's movement. she asserted, are to be found in the civil rights struggle.

In 1964 she and a colleague. Casey Hayden, wrote about the issue of self-determination for women in SNCC. A year later they wrote and sent to 40 activist women a second manifesto. "A Kind of Memo from Casev Hayden and Mary King to a Number of Other Women in the Peace and Freedom Movements."

She said that in the years since then. "It has been pretty well established that that manifesto served as a catalyst for a lot of the consciousness-raising groups that hegan meeting around the coun-

Domingo could not be released from a Sept. 15 rehearsal for a performance at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, the opera star's secretary-manager, said. However, the musical event's producer said he thinks Domingo backed out be-cause Pope John Panl II won't be lapse of oil prices late in 1985. telling his people that for months. that the pope's security people wouldn't allow him to be that exposed for so long," said Tom Mc-Coy, producer of "Celebration of Joy" scheduled for the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum. "Apparently, communication is so bad that only recently did Domingo realize the pope wouldn't be listening." Merropolitan Opera officials confirmed the Spanish tenor is sched-uled to sing the title role in Verdi's opera "Otelio" on Sept. 21. Domin-go's presence at a rehearsal Sept. 15 was strongly urged, but was not essential, they said.

The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra says it has made the "revolutionary" decision to appoint three conductors to fill the position of music director vacated last spring by the violinist Pinchas Zukerman. The Minnesota orchestra named Christopher Hogwood, a British conductor, harpsichordist and scholar, as its new director of music, effective in September 1988. Hugh Wolff, music director of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, will become principal cooductor, and John Adams, former composer io residence with the San Francisco Symphony. Orchestra, will be "creative chair for a year in what was described as a rotating position.

John B. Connally told a U.S. federal bankruptey court he has more than $93.3 million in liabilities and only $13 million in assets, including about 4,000 one-dollar bills be signed as U.S. Treasury secretary. The 70-year-old former Texas governor sought protection July 31 under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy. laws, seeking to reorganize his debts. Connally's liabilities included $9.3 million owed secured crediors and nearly $84 million owed er Viktor Astafyev.

Placido Domingo will not appear unsecured creditors, most of them at a gala musical performance to banks or other fioancial institutions. Connally, governor from 1963 to 1969, served as U.S. Navy secretary under President John F. Kennedy and as Treasury secretary under President Richard M. Nixon. In 1980, he unsuccessfully sought the Republican Party's nomination for president. Contally has blamed his financial misfortunes oo the dowoturn in the Texas economy.

> John Whitney Payson says he fears that new tax rules and the rising art market mean many U.S.owned art treasures will be sold to foreigners. "I'm ofraid we're going to begin losing a large part of our beritage because of this law," he said. So why is he selling Vincent van Gogh's "Irises," which his fam-ily has owned for 40 years, in a Sotheby's auction in New York Nov. 11? The cost of insuring the painting for travel and exhibition had become "lethal." he said. The painting was acquired in 1947 by Payson's mother. Joan Whitney Payson, a philanthropist, art collector and owner of the New York Mets baseball team Payson said that proceeds from the sale would be used to create a family founda -. tion, a general endowment for Westbrook College in Maine, and a charitable arts foundation that would focus on Maine's "maritime! beritage." Earlier this year. the Dutch painter's "Sunflowers" became the most expensive auctioned picture when a Japanese insurance company paid $39.9 million for it and another van Gogh, "The Bridge at Trinquetaille," was sold to a European collector for $20.2
